Ease on in to summer...

Perhaps it is time to relax and breathe a bit?

I just returned from a couple weeks of vacationing and teaching in Oregon: quiet days and contemplation in the high desert, sea lions and shore days out on the coast and a week at teachers' conference in Eugene. The return to New Mexico included fireworks of celebration and a litter of puppies, too. When you look at the Fiestas and holidays and openings and events in our creative state, I think this might be the only week or two to squeeze between those seasons of fairs, shows and exhibits.

Coming up: The Fiber Arts Council tries to round up a cache of activities that might catch your fiber eye (or pocketbook!). The volunteers are taking a break after Fiber Arts Fiesta in May--before starting plans for the exhibit and show that happens in the even-numbered years. Watch this space for the Call-for-Entry announcement. Plan for the exhibit in April. It is a juried show and the rules are few. We usually open it up to ALL fiber artists--so you don't even have to belong to one of the co-sponsoring guilds. We'd like you to invite you to join any that suit your fancy...

I haven't had time to check out the ABQ Fiber Arts Council Events page. Anything good I shouldn't miss?

Fire Season - Fire Art

In 2014, a group of artists joined fire scientists and land managers at a fire science boot camp in Arizona. After spending a few days together in the woods, the artists went on to create beautiful works of art that incorporated the science and emotions surrounding fire in the Southwest. The show, called Fires of Change, traveled from Flagstaff to Tuscon and is currently on exhibit in Albuquerque. Check out the show and/or the educational events at 516 Arts downtown at 516 Arts through 7/22.

TID BITS (What's a "tid"??)

I keep a special stack of books made before about 1830 that have pages made out of cotton or linen rag, instead of wood pulp. When you find one of these books, you'll notice that the paper feels different; it's very malleable, almost like fabric. I like using these for sculptural or dimensional projects like paper flowers because the paper can take a lot of folding and wrinkling. --Jeannine Stein, Mixed Media Artist

First Gallup Native Arts Market

August 10 and 12

Showcasing through April 2018, the Wheelwright Museum of the American Indian will present Beads: A Universe of Meaning. The exhibition traces the history of imported glass beads as a medium of exchange, artistic expression, and identity for indigenous peoples throughout North America. It features garments, articles of adornment, and works of art dating from circa 1850 to the present, and examines the ways in which makers of beadwork have simultaneously sustained tradition, engaged with popular culture, and developed a uniquely native art form.

Description:

This solo exhibition focuses on the deep, geologic memory of the Earth, as revealed in Open Space. In wild and undisturbed spaces one can sense the presence of millennia that stretch beyond the human lifetime. Through drawings and hand woven

French tapestries, Elizabeth Buckley offers a glimpse into the realm of geologic, mythic, and temporal memory. Her works take the viewer back in time to European history and art, to the petroglyphs along the escarpment of Albuquerque, and then to her present-day interpretations.
